Memories in Miniature

Medha Bhavani Girish
EE23B112

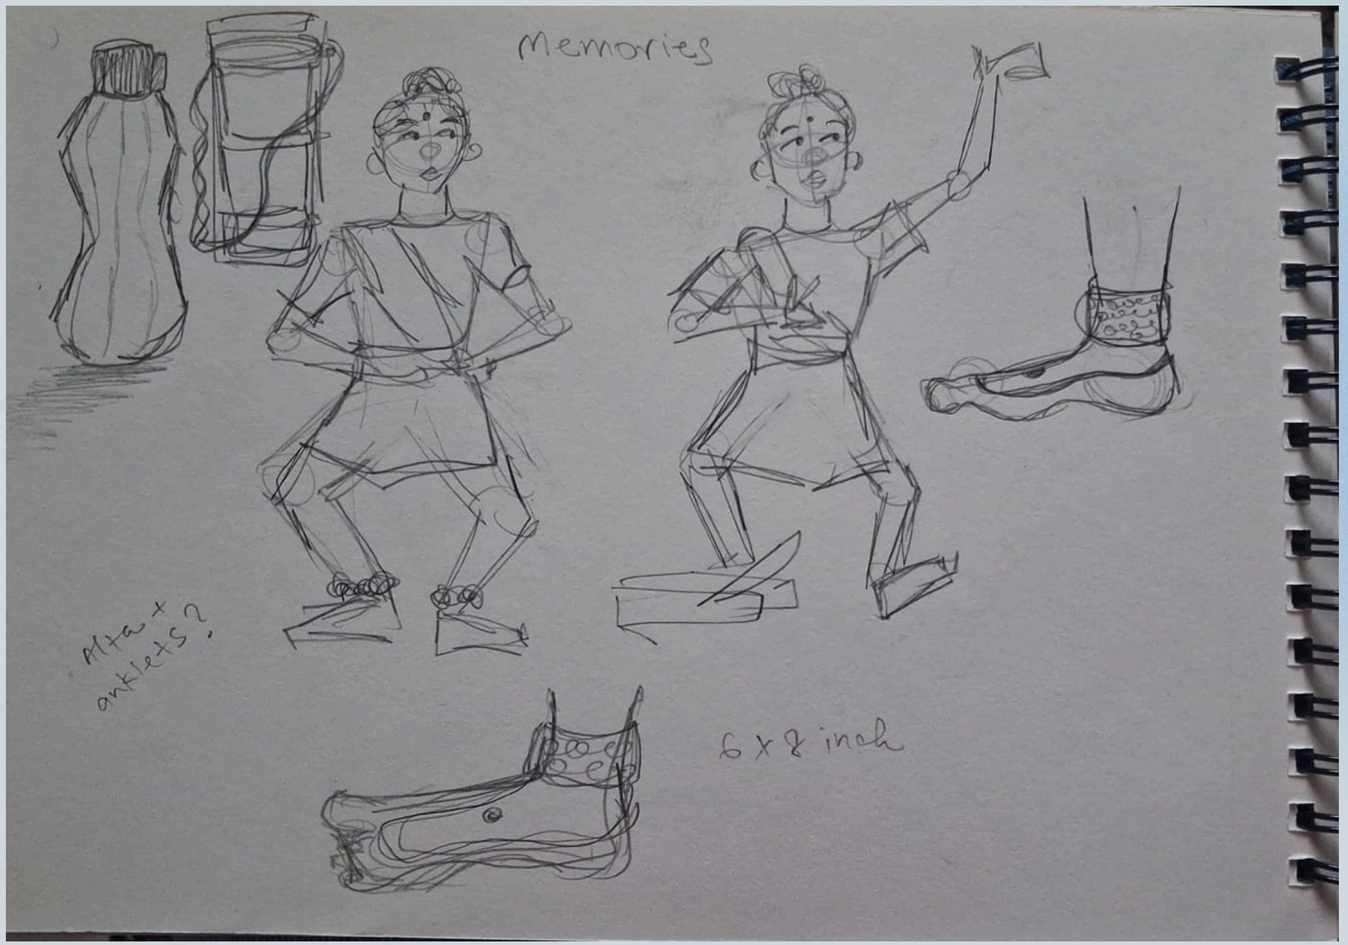
Brainstorming.

Some childhood memories I sketched out while figuring out what to sculpt.

Every time it rained, my brother and I would make paper boats and run out to play with them. We would place them on the road near a running stream of rainwater and watch them sail down and run along with them.

Brainstorming.

Some childhood memories I sketched out while figuring out what to sculpt.

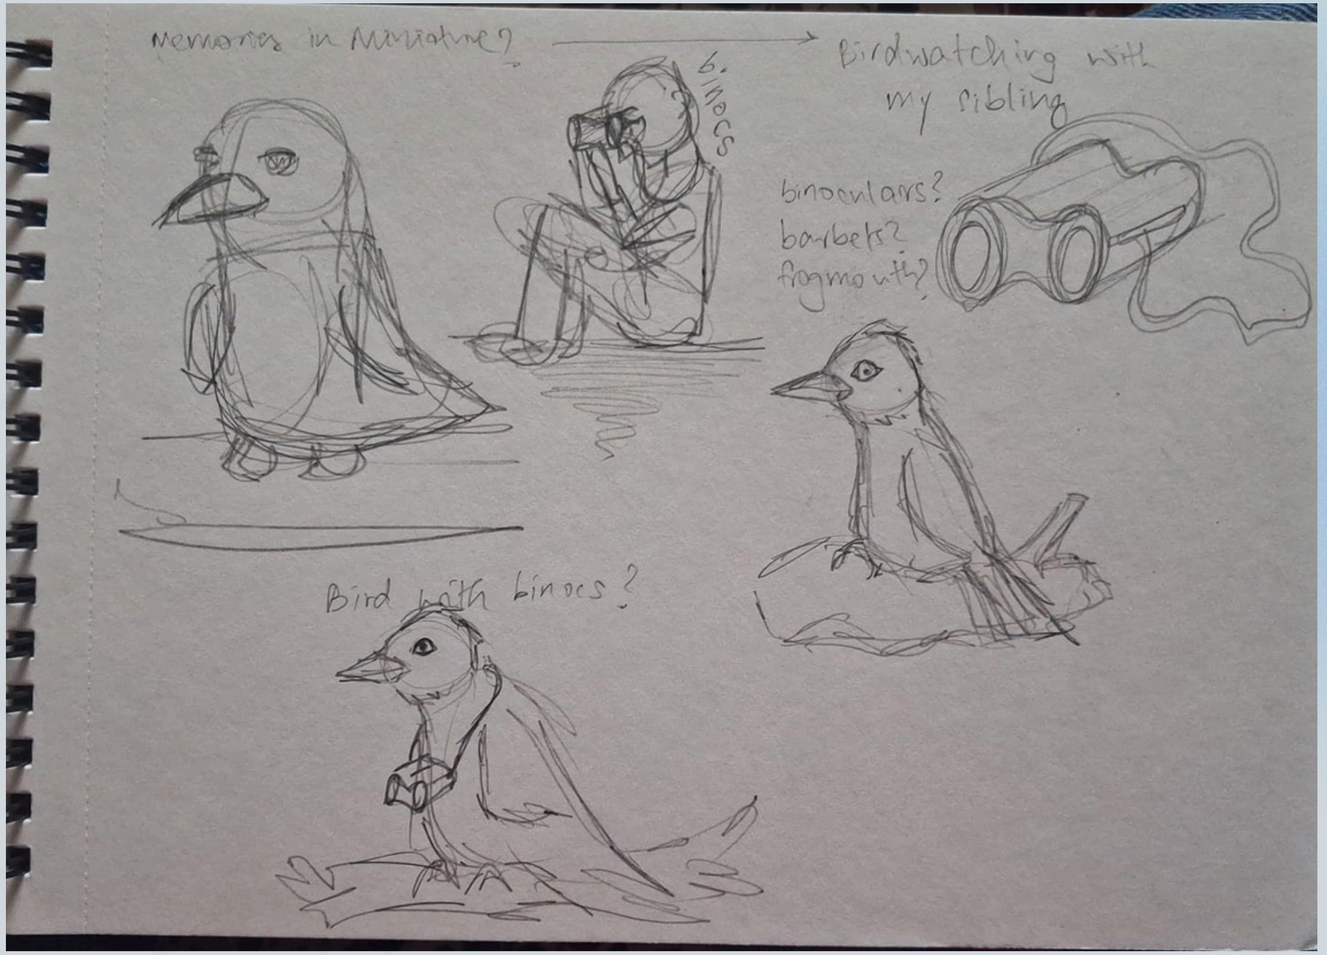


My lunchbox for almost the entirety of my schooling was the steel dabbas that stacked one on top of the other. When I went for my internship in my home city, my mother started packing lunch for me in the same steel dabba again, and I realised how many childhood memories I have associated with that lunchbox.

I am also a classical dancer- I have been trained in Mohiniyattam for the last 11 years. My weekends during my childhood were linked with going for dance class.

Brainstorming.

Some childhood memories I sketched out while figuring out what to sculpt.



My brother loves birds. He is an avid birdwatcher and it is a passion that he has taught my parents and me to have as well. So many of our family trips have been centred around birdwatching, and it is a fascination and an interest that all of us have come to collectively share.

The bird I decided to sculpt is a coppersmith barbet- This is a bird whose mating call sounds like a metalworker hitting a sheet of copper, and whenever we heard the sound of the barbet, it would be a competition between my brother and me to see who could spot the bird first.

I decided to add binoculars around the bird's neck as a token to the hours and days we've spent birdwatching with binocs as children.

Sculpting.

The stacked steel lunchbox I used to take to school along with the dosa tawa- I used to have dosa for breakfast every morning before school with chutney powder while watching Oggy and the Cockroaches on TV.

Sculpting.

The coppersmith barbet with the binoculars around his neck.